² Issuing a split decision, the jury was excused and a mistrial was declared because two of three counts were not unanimously resolved. Following the District Attorney's in-house review, the undecided counts were reset for a second trial before a new jury at the end of October.
