STATE HIST STATUS
#927

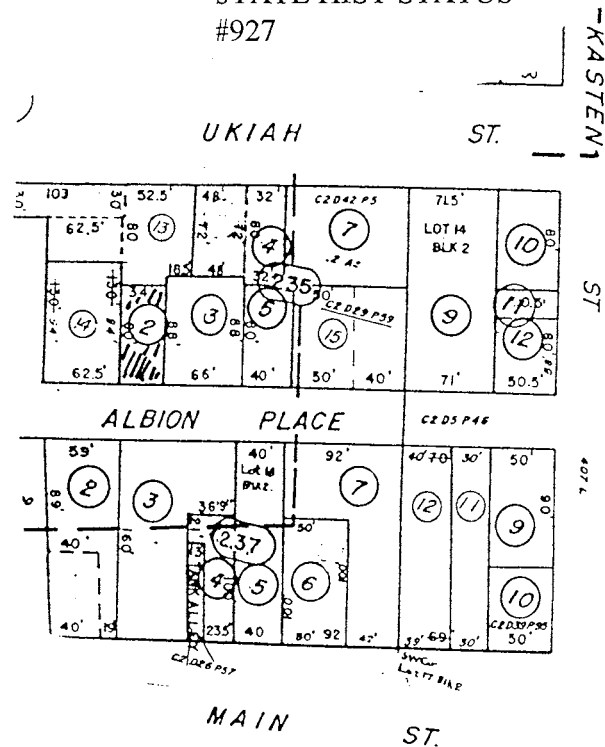

Much of the history of this landmark temple was researched by local descendant, Lorraine Hee, for documentation that qualified it for State Historical Landmark Status.

Oral history dates this temple back to 1854. Hee's great-grandfather sailed to this coast from China with a number of relatives in the early 1850's. In 1875, there were approximately 700 Chinese living in Mendocino. On Wm. Heeser's subdivision map of 1868, the parcel shows as occupied by Eli Wa Sing.

Hee says her great-grandfather, Chong Sung (aka Joe Lee, built the temple along with three other men. It has been owned by the Hee family since 1871. Each succeeding generation has made an oral commitment to preserve the temple. Incorrectly referred to as the "Joss House", the temple has remained intact, both exterior and interior, preserving ethnic religious and cultural history. It is a non-denominational house of worship dedicated to Quan Ti, a Chinese national hero who fought to restore the Han Dynasty in the Second Century, A.D. and who lived from 161 A.D. to 219 A.D.

The temple is a functioning house of worship. The interior holds symbols of rites of worship and are original. The exterior is painted red with green trim, red signifying the essence of joy and good luck. It is the only remaining such Chinese house of worship on the Pacific north coast, from San Francisco to the Oregon border. The windows look out to the Pacific Ocean and are said to be in harmony with the wind and water.

The Hee children of Mendocino and other interested citizens have formed a non-profit organization to continue to maintain the temple. In 1998, they were granted $130,000 for renovation costs.

Beacon, Nov. 4, 1947, Geo Hee has begun the erection of a residential cottage on the same lot as the Chinese Temple.

The Hee family members have occupied this cottage ever since. Martha, Mrs. Geo, Hee died in 1970.

Joss House
Albion Street

Owned by George Hee this Chinese temple is one of very few left in California. We know of only two others: one at Weaverville, the other at Oroville. According to Mr. Hee the land on which it stands was given by William H. Kelly; the original section was built in the 1850's, and it was enlarged in 1870. "Joe" Lee was one of the builders and it seems likely that the deed to the property was put in Lee's name.

Apparently there were temporary joss houses from time to time and in other locations such as wash houses. A Beacon news item of November 4, 1882 reports:

A Chinese temple or Joss house has been built in this place and was formally opened on Monday last. The company that built it is the "Chun Ning Tong", and the individuals composing it are Eli Tia Key, On Toe, Chung Koer and Ah Sam. We were informed that the meats and drinks with which the table was covered are the refreshments offered to the Joss. After remaining some time on the table, which seems to be an altar, they are eaten by any worshipper who pleases. . .

This one has endured, largely to the credit of George Hee who promised his mother that he would always keep it as it was.

A Chinese school has been established in one of the rooms of the old school house, and Miss Laura Nelson has accepted the position of teacher. This solves the vexed question of admitting Chinese children into our public school, over which there has been considerable trouble here. The trustees consented to the use of the old school building (originally the first church, built in 1857), and the expenses attending the maintenance of the school is defrayed by tuition fees paid by the pupils.

— Mendocino Beacon, July 7, 1889

The characters above the door refer to the emperor or God King in whose honor this temple was erected. Approximate interpretations are: Wu Dai Miao (Warlike Emperor Temple) or, an alternate reading, Mo Dai Mue (Military God King Temple).

CALIFORNIA HISTORICAL LANDMARKS

The Mendocino Joss House*

Justification:

The Mendocino Joss House, a small Chinese temple, is one of the early buildings in Mendocino. Oral history dates the Joss House to 1854 only three years after the town of Mendocino was established. Not only is the Joss House one of the early structures of Mendocino, it is also the only remaining Joss House on the Pacific northcoast, north of San Francisco, to the Oregon border.

The Mendocino Joss House meets the "Statewide Significance" criteria for State Historical Landmark registration in that it is the last Joss House in this large geographical area. It appears that the Mendocino Joss House was also the first Joss House in this geographic area (see supporting research); the only recorded Joss House which dates earlier than the Mendocino temple is the temple in Weaverville dated through oral history to 1852 or 1853. The Weaverville Joss House, however, burned in 1873 and the present temple is an 1874 replacement. Research also has uncovered the existence of a sizeable Chinese community in Mendocino; such a substantial community was unusual for the Pacific northcoast region since settlement of Chinese for anytime other than temporary was discouraged. The existence of this community and the inter-relation between the community and the Joss House is quite significant to this geographic region as well as to the ethnic history of California.

The Mendocino Joss House which has remained intact both on the exterior and the interior is an invaluable resource for the State of California. It is a document of the ethnic religious history and cultural history. This State Historical Landmark registration application does not propose to list the Mendocino Joss House for the significance of influential individuals nor for the architecture of the Joss House; the basis for the registration application is that the Mendocino Joss House is of extreme significance as an historical resource for the State of California.

General Comments:

The California Office of Historic Preservation has assisted the applicant Lorraine Hee in the preparation of this form. It is the judgment of the staff that the Mendocino Joss House meets the criteria for registration as a State Historical Landmark in the area of "statewide significance" and in the area of "ethnic history". Approval of this application and listing of the Mendocino Joss House as a California State Historical Landmark is strongly recommended.

Is this landmark of statewide significance as described in the State of Policy? Yes

Explain (use extra sheet if necessary):

The Mendocino Joss House is the only remaining Chinese Joss House, in use, along the Pacific Northcoast of California, north of San Francisco and south of the Oregon border. Oral history dates the structure, still on its original site, to 1854; documented history dates the structure to 1883.¹ It is probable that the oral history date is the more correct of the two since there was a substantial Chinese community in Mendocino by the 1870's; it is likely that this community would have required a temple before 1883.²

The Mendocino Joss House also remains as the only surviving reminder of a once substantial Chinese community with its own history and its own customs. If it were not for the physical integrity of the Joss House, the past history of the Chinese in Mendocino and this part of California would probably be lost to most visitors unfamiliar with the local history of Mendocino. The Joss House is a rare resource which retains both exterior and interior physical integrity; it is, as well, a document to the past Chinese history of Mendocino and California.

2. The documented history which dates the Mendocino Joss House is an 1883 Sanborn map which shows the actual structure on its present location, Mendocino City Sanborn Map, Sanborn Map and Publishing Company Limited, July 1883. This map is in the process of becoming the property of the Mendocino Historical Society.
The population of the Chinese community in Mendocino is recorded in the Mendocino County Historical Society Newsletter, Vol. 1, #3, 1963, p. 7 and is listed as numbering 700 by 1875.

BRIEF HISTORY AND DESCRIPTION (Corresponding to one or more items under I, II, or III of the Statement of Policy.)

The Mendocino Chinese Joss House, the last Joss House on the Pacific Northcoast, is an historically and culturally significant structure associated with a pioneer Chinese community. While the Chinese built Chinatowns throughout the State of California and Joss Houses (small temples) serviced many of these communities, most Joss Houses were burned, destroyed, or lost to history in some manner.¹ This unfortunate fate makes the Mendocino Joss House a valuable resource for the State of California as well as the town of Mendocino. Based upon oral history, the Mendocino Joss House may be not only the longest in-use temple, but the oldest "original" Joss House in California.²

The Weaverville Joss House, a California State Landmark, was believed constructed in 1852 or 1853; this building, however, burned in 1873 and the present structure dates from 1874.³ The Marysville Joss House, thought to be the oldest "original" building was built early in 1880.⁴ Therefore, based upon the oral history date of 1854, the Mendocino Joss House appears to be the oldest "original" California Joss House. Documents show that the land upon which the Joss House sits was owned by Chinese in 1867. Although the building does not appear on a Sanborn map until 1883,⁵ it is unlikely that the Chinese community, which by 1875 numbered 700 would have held the land for sixteen years before constructing a temple.⁶

It should be pointed out that the Mendocino Joss House is not a mere relic but has remained, since the date of its erection, a functioning temple. It is a rare and valuable resource for California's ethnic Chinese history. The Joss House, located on a rise overlooking the Pacific Ocean and the Mendocino Chinese settlement acted as a cultural, social, and religious center for the community. Individual prayers were said in the temple, births and marriages were celebrated as were special occasions such as the Chinese New Year, the Full Moon, and the Half Moon. The small temple was dedicated to Kwan Dai, the God of War, a popular diety who lived from 161 A.D. to 219 A.D. A faded scroll still remains, thought to be brought to Mendocino in the early 1850's from China,⁷ which shows Kwan Dai, his son Kwan Ping, and his follower and sword bearer Ju Chang. Before entering the temple one walks under a sign which reads "Military God, Kings Temple."⁸ The sign done in gold Chinese characters on a red painted background remains to this day. The building exterior was painted red with green trim. Red signified the essence of joy and good luck.⁹ As was typical of other Chinese Joss Houses, the Mendocino Joss House was constructed in an architectural style common to the area. The simple rectangular, gable roofed building is sheathed in ship lap redwood siding.

While the exterior of the building is not a rare architectural resource, the interior is an invaluable resource of ethnic history. Entering the main room one now finds a small table in front of the altar which contains three place settings of small bowls of various sizes and chopsticks. These bowls held the food offerings for ceremonial occasions. Centrally located in the main room was a small table with a bamboo mat in front so that worshippers could kneel and pray. A small stove sitting in the southwest corner of the room was used for the burning of prayer papers. Behind the small table is the shrine containing a cloth picture of Kwan Dai, the diety to whom the temple was dedicated. Fortune sticks once used by the priest were set on both sides of the portrait of Kwan Dai. In addition to the wooden altar on the north wall of the main room and the small wood table and the stove, the furnishings of the temple interior are sparse; two simple wood benches line the side walls and two ornate lanterns hang over the prayer table. All of the interior furnishings except for the addition of a recent lantern over the main altar to replace one which burned, are said to be original.¹⁰

An invaluable resource to the State of California, the Mendocino Joss House is the only surviving physical document (made more significant by its continued use from the early 1850's) which retains its original integrity and marks the now mostly lost history of the Chinese in Mendocino. Mendocino was one of the few communities along the Pacific Northcoast which housed a substantial Chinese community. Although Mendocino's Chinatown burned in 1910, the knowledge of its existence and the cultural and historical relationship between the Joss House and the Chinese community are significant aspects of local and state history.

Access: The Mendocino Joss House is visible from Albion Street. The Joss House is also open on various days or upon request by historical societies and visitors.

Maintenance: The Hee family has owned the Joss House since at least 1871 and each generation has made an oral agreement to maintain and preserve the Joss House.

Footnotes:

1. A good discussion of the fate of California Joss Houses is covered in Mariann Kaye Wells, Chinese Temples in California, unpublished thesis, University of California, Berkeley, 1962. Although there was once a substantial Chinese population in Mendocino, as of 1979 one Chinese family remains; with the disappearance of the Chinese community in the early twentieth century the visual reminders also disappeared and this is a pattern typical of many California towns such as Cambria, California which contains a Chinese Joss House that is undocumented except for oral/local history.
2. The oral history which surrounds the Mendocino Joss House is documented in Bruce Levene's Mendocino County Remembered. An Oral History, Mendocino, The Mendocino County Historical Society, 1976, pp. 52, 199.
The history of the Mendocino Joss House has also been passed down, generation to generation, by the Hee family (owners of the temple since at least 1871). Oral history states that the temple has been in use since its erection in 1854; it is used today by Hee family members.

Ms. Lorraine A. Hee
Post Office Box 434
Mendocino, CA 95460

Dear Ms. Hee:

Thank you for your letter of inquiry requesting the assistance of the Office of Historic Preservation to preserve the Chinese Joss House in the community of Mendocino.

The Mendocino and Headlands Historic District is listed on the National Register of Historic Places. The Office of Historic Preservation administers several historical registration programs in California. The National Register is the official inventory of the nation's cultural resources worthy of recognition and preservation. The California State Historical Landmarks Program identifies properties of statewide historical importance to California representing the first, last, only, or most significant of a type in a region. Application forms for both registry programs are enclosed for your examination and use. Questions on registration procedures may be directed to Mr. Aaron Gallup of my staff at (916) 322-8598.

The California Environmental Quality Act of 1970 includes provisions for the protection of historical properties. Local public agencies must consider project proposals in accordance with CEQA requirements by addressing environmental assessments upon properties of historical and cultural significance. Enclosed is a copy of the CEQA guidelines.

Please do not hesitate to contact Eugene Itogawa of my staff at (916) 322-8701 should you require further assistance in this matter.

Sincerely yours,

THE NATIONAL REGISTER OF HISTORIC PLACES -- INFORMATION FOR PROPERTY OWNERS

Properties listed in the National Register of Historic Places are eligible for many benefits. Besides the distinct honor of being recognized as part of our nation's valuable cultural resources, National Register properties are eligible for financial benefits such as grants-in-aid, federally guaranteed loans, and property tax relief as well as Federal tax incentives for rehabilitating income producing properties.

Listing in the Register does not affect title to the property. However, in order to destroy or substantially alter a significant cultural property, whether or not it is in the Register, an environmental impact report may be necessary. The costs of demolishing income producing Register properties may not be tax deductible.

This pamphlet discusses the many benefits as well as the possible disadvantages that come with National Register listing. It also explains how to nominate a property to the Register.

I. WHAT IS THE NATIONAL REGISTER OF HISTORIC PLACES?

The National Register of Historic Places, administered by the Keeper of the Register, U.S. Department of the Interior, Washington, D.C., is the Nation's official list of cultural resources worthy of preservation. The Register is a catalog of American culture -- the tangible remains of our heritage. It is also an authoritative guide for federal, state, and local governments, and for citizens groups interested in protecting and enhancing these irreplaceable elements of our cultural environment.

II. WHAT PROPERTIES ARE ELIGIBLE FOR THE NATIONAL REGISTER?

Properties eligible for the National Register include districts, sites, buildings, structures, and objects of local, state or national importance that are significant for their historical, architectural, archeological, or cultural values. They should retain integrity of location, design, setting, materials, workmanship, feeling and association and:

1. Be associated with events that have made a significant contribution to the broad patterns of our history; or
2. Be associated with the lives of persons significant in our past; or
3. Embody the distinctive characteristics of a type, period, or method of construction, or represent the work of a master, or possess high artistic values, or represent a significant and distinguishable entity whose components may lack individual distinction; or
4. Have yielded, or be likely to yield, information important in prehistory or history.

Properties less than fifty years old ordinarily are not eligible for the Register unless they are of exceptional importance. There are, however, many exceptions within California. These include the 1939 Ford Building in San Diego, the 1931 Paramount Theatre in Oakland, the World War II Fort McArthur, several Frank Lloyd Wright buildings, and others.

A property need not be one of a kind to be eligible for the National Register. It must simply meet one of the four criteria listed above. For example, the Register includes numerous Victorian houses, 19th Century adobes, prehistoric Native American sites, and commercial buildings throughout California, often within the same community. These properties are not necessarily unique in California, but they are significant and worthy of preservation. Properties of local, state, or national significance are equally eligible.

III. HOW IS A PROPERTY NOMINATED TO THE NATIONAL REGISTER?

The nomination process involves several steps. Anyone may submit an application to the National Register by completing the proper forms available from the State Office of Historic Preservation. After review, this office presents completed nominations to the State Historical Resources Commission, with a staff evaluation based on the federal criteria. The Commission considers the nominations at a public hearing, restricting the evaluation to the historic, archeological, architectural and other cultural merit of the property.

Applications which are approved by the Commission are sent to the State Historic Preservation Officer for his review and certification. The State Historic Preservation Officer makes the formal nomination to the National Register in Washington, D.C. All nominations are given close professional scrutiny by the Register staff prior to listing in the National Register of Historic Places.

IV. WHAT ARE THE BENEFITS OF LISTING IN THE NATIONAL REGISTER?

Properties listed in the National Register are eligible for a variety of benefits including grants, loans, tax relief, and legal protection. Some of the programs are specifically intended for culturally significant properties, while others benefit them indirectly.

Listing in the National Register may not be necessary for some of these programs but the Register criteria of significance is considered a good framework for determining eligibility.

Grants

Grants for preservation purposes are available from several federal and state sources, and from numerous private foundations. An extensive list of funding sources for preservation is available from the Office of Historic Preservation.

Federal

The National Historic Preservation Act provides matching grants for use in acquiring, rehabilitating or restoring properties in the National Register. Individual grants usually do not exceed $40,000. Grant recipients are not required to match the full amount of the federal grant with cash. The match may include services of equivalent value. These grants are administered by the State Office of Historic Preservation.

The Department of Housing and Urban Development's Community Development "Block Grants" may be used by communities for acquiring, restoring, rehabilitating, and preserving structures of historical and architectural significance. Specific information is available from the nearest HUD office or from local planning departments.

The Public Works and Development Facilities Program under the Department of Commerce gives grants to state and local governments and to non-profit organizations for public works projects in areas of high unemployment. The program can provide grants up to 80% of the cost of acquiring and developing land or acquiring and renovating facilities. Recipients include the California Quadrangle in San Diego, and other properties of National Register status in California. Contact the Economic Development Administration Office in Oakland or Sacramento for information.

Grants are available from numerous other sources, such as the National Endowment for the Arts under their American Architectural Heritage Program for planning activities to preserve National Register status properties. Contact the NEA Washington office.

State

The Nejedly-Hart State Urban and Coastal Park Bond Act of 1976 provides grants to local government agencies for the acquisition and development of culturally significant properties, including those listed in the National Register. Contact the State Department of Parks and Recreation, Office of Grants and Local Assistance.

Loans

Properties listed in the National Register are also eligible for a variety of loans offered through public and private institutions.

The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development under the Title I, Home Improvement Loan Program, will insure loans made by private financial institutions to restore and preserve residential properties listed in or eligible for listing in the National Register. Loans are available for up to $15,000 per dwelling unit with up to 15 years to repay. Loans will be made at the current market interest rate, not to exceed 12%. The loans, called Historic Preservation Loans, are available from FHA insured private financial institutions.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture offers loans through the Business and Industrial Loans Program and the Community Facilities Loans Program for the acquisition and development of existing facilities in rural areas and towns. Projects must improve community facilities or support the development of sources of employment. Individuals, organizations, and government entities are eligible. Contact the Farmers' Home Administration Office in Woodland.

Mendocino temple repair

MENDOCINO — Few visitors who flock to this bawdy old lumber town turned national tourist mecca bother to glance up as they pass the weathered old building sitting slightly askew on sagging wooden piers at the edge of Albion Street.

Their eyes are on Mendocino's fabled Victorians, originally homes for mill workers and merchants, but now all dolled up

Ramirez was 'desperate, miserable'

Psychologist tells of murder suspect's state

By CLARK MASON
Staff Writer

SAN JOSE — Theresa Ramirez was "desperate and miserable," and preoccupied with the seeming incompetence of physicians, according to a psychologist who testified Tuesday about her mental condition around the time she is accused of murdering Petaluma doctor Michael Tavis.

Randall Smith, a clinical psychologist testifying for the defense, said Ramirez knew that doctors perceived her as a "crock." Yet, she believed they interfered with her ability to obtain proper care for her recently diagnosed diabetes and get further reconstructive surgery to provide the appearance she wanted following her mastectomy.

Smith was on the stand Tuesday as defense attorney Harry Allen spent his second day outlining the troubled history of his client, who has pleaded not guilty by reason of insanity to murder.

In the months leading up to the shooting, Ramirez probably developed a major depression, Smith said. She reported a sense of hopelessness, paralysis, overwhelming fatigue and passive thoughts of suicide.

On the surface, however, there was forced pleasantness, the "cut-sie pie veneer," the organized, neat, well-attended Santa Rosa house reflecting her struggle for a sense of control.

Psychologist Randall Smith described Ramirez as having a borderline personality disorder.

were, from her perspective, responsible for a decade of "horrible and botched medical care," Smith testified.

Under cross-examination by Prosecutor Jill Ravitch, Smith acknowledged Ramirez showed no remorse in the jail house interviews he began in November 1997, four months after her arrest, but continued to express "bitter resentment" toward Tavis and other health care providers.

Smith said Ramirez no longer seemed depressed.

The San Francisco psychologist was called to the stand by defense attorney Allen, who is trying to win acquittal for Ramirez of first-degree murder charges in connection with the July 3, 1997, death of Tavis and the permanent disabling of his office manager, Kay Carter, who was shot in the head.

Allen has not admitted Ramirez was the shooter, but is trying to show the jury that if she did it, her mental state made it impossible to "meaningfully deliberate" the kill-

Controversial bus yard wins approval

Supervisors OK Juniper Ave. site

By LORI A. CARTER
Staff Writer

The Sonoma County Board of Supervisors reaffirmed Tuesday its support for a planned school bus maintenance yard near Elsie Allen High School, saying fears about traffic and pedestrian safety weren't significant enough to derail the project.

In a 3-2 vote, with supervisors Tim Smith and Mike Cale dissenting, the board finalized a straw vote it took in December approving zoning changes to allow as many as 110 West County Transportation Agency school buses to park on a nine-acre parcel on Juniper Avenue south of Bellevue Avenue.

The maintenance yard is a quarter-mile from where 17-year-old pedestrian Patrick Scott was struck and killed by a passing van while he walked along the narrow road. His death sparked community concern over what some consider unsafe road conditions in the southwest Santa Rosa area.

After its nonbinding vote Dec. 8, supervisors imposed several conditions on the proposal, including limiting the number of buses allowed, requiring a six-foot berm to lessen noise and dust, and rerouting traffic off neighborhood streets. A week later, Supervisor Mike Reilly delayed a final vote to further investigate traffic and safety concerns.

Tuesday, the board decided the modifications — and other concerns raised after the public comment period closed — weren't

BODEGA BAY Nicholas Green student award

The parents of Nicholas Green have established a youth award in memory of the 7-year-old Bodega Bay boy who was killed in Italy in 1994 in a drive-by shooting.

The Nicholas Green Distinguished Students Award will recognize outstanding youths in third through sixth grades in every state. The awards, which include a $500 savings bond, will be given in cooperation with the National Association for Gifted Children.

Nicholas' death and the decision by his parents, Maggie and Reg Green, to donate his organs to seven Italian patients were portrayed last year in a TV movie, "Nicholas' Gift," starring Jamie Lee Curtis and Alan Bates.

"We started the Distinguished Student Awards because we wanted to recognize gifts and talents in children who are now about the age Nicholas was when he died," Reg Green said in a written release.

The youths will be awarded for their efforts in such areas as visual and performing arts, athletics, leadership and academics. Information on receiving award applications can be found at the association's Web site: www.nagc.org.

SONOMA COUNTY Ex-counsel stays on board

Former Sonoma County Counsel Jim Botz has signed on to continue providing legal advice to two county agencies, under an agreement approved Tuesday by Sonoma County supervisors.

Botz, the county's top attorney from 1972 through 1998, retired last month from full-time county employment, will remain a part-time counsel to the Sonoma County Agricultural Preservation and Open Space District and will also help the Sonoma County Water Agency on water rights issues.

Botz will earn $120 an hour and his contract can be terminated at anytime.

safety concerns. Smith said he was convinced the bus yard was not dangerous, but voted against the project because he did not want to add more congestion to Highway 101. Supervisors Paul Kelley, Mike Kerns and Reilly decided the overall benefits outweighed the traffic concerns.

The West County Transportation Agency is a group of school districts that provides bus service to 3,500 students. The agency applied for the zoning changes in June to build the bus yard, which will save an estimated $1.3 million a year by consolidating services and sharing space with the adjacent Sonoma County Transit bus yard.

It's estimated that the hospital has enough money to remain open for three years.

Managed care is shrinking health care, sending fewer patients to the hospital and getting them out faster. In addition, the federal Balanced Budget Act of 1997 has significantly reduced Medicare reimbursements, pushing some hospitals, especially small ones that cater to an older population such as Sonoma Valley's, closer to extinction.

Sonoma Valley Hospital also is wrestling with new state laws calling for hospitals to comply with seismic standards.

The hospital hired two consultants to help grapple with the problems.

One consultant advised the last independent hospital in Sonoma County to immediately seek affiliation with some corporate partner whose deep pockets could help it stay afloat. The other consultant laid out five earthquake safety options — ranging in cost from almost $16 million to $49 million — and suggested bond measures to pay for them.

The hospital board Tuesday sought advice from the City Council.

"We're not in a position to provide money in any amount that would do you any good," said Mayor Louis Ramponi. "What we can do is lobby for legislation, we can help with fund-raising and with planning issues if it gets to that point."

Firefighters from Occidental and Graton work their way through a burned-out home Tuesday in Occidental. The blaze started in the attic.

Occidental couple loses home of 40 years in fire

An Occidental couple lost their home of 40 years Tuesday when fire broke out in the attic, said Occidental fire officials.

The fire started about 10:30 a.m., destroying the Dupont Road home owned by the Norcia family, said Fire Chief Roon Lunardi. But for the past 40 years the rental house had been where Lupe Vera raised his family, said Lunardi.

County fire officials determined it started in the attic, possibly sparking from a chimney flue, Lunardi said.

The roof of the single-story home had collapsed in flames when Lunardi arrived first on the scene, he said.

Occidental's volunteer firefighters were aided by Graton, Monte Rio and Goldridge fire departments.

Vera apparently had just returned home as the fire started. Vera's wife, whose first name was not available, had left earlier for an appointment, he said.

Lunardi estimated the damage at $60,000 for the home and contents. As well as the house, flames gutted a travel trailer parked nearby.

as quaint New England-style bed-and-breakfast inns, restaurants and shops catering to travelers from around the world.

The faded facade of the Temple of Kwan Tai, perched on a knoll overlooking Mendocino Bay, pales in comparison.

At first glance, there's nothing unusual about the simple, rectangular building sheathed in faded red ship lap siding, and adorned with green trim. A rickety picket fence out front suggests the cottage might have once been home to a mill worker's family.

Only a small sign done in gold Chinese characters on red-painted background and hanging above the front porch hints that up the creaky wooden steps and behind the narrow wooden front door stands what preservation experts now believe to be a historic treasure of national importance.

According to a newly completed study funded by the National Trust for Historic Preservation, the Temple of Kwan Tai is probably the oldest "original" Chinese Joss House, or small rural temple, in California.

That it has survived virtually intact is thanks to the dedication of four generations of a local Chinese family, whose ancestor was among the temple's founders 145 years ago.

Hee family members, whose great-grandfather first arrived on the Mendocino Coast in 1852 after a transoceanic crossing from China in a sampan, say the temple appears today at it did then, despite generations of use.

"Nothing has changed. My father told us it was the same as when he was a boy, and when his grandmother was a child," said Lorraine Hee Chorley, a descendant of a family that has looked after the temple since its founding.

A step into the temple is a step back in time.

The bare wood floor and walls of exposed, rough redwood planks are original, as are the wooden altar and relics believed to have arrived from China in the early 1850s.

The focal point above the altar is a delicate, silk scroll depicting the deity to whom the shrine was dedicated. The material is so old that at first glance it appears to be drawn on parchment paper. In the drawing, Kwan Tai, a popular Chinese god of war who lived from 161 A.D. to 219 A.D., is surrounded by his son, Kwan Ping, and his follower and sword bearer, Ju Chang. The sign outside reads in Chinese, "Military God, Kings Temple."

In front of the altar is a small table, which contains three place settings of chopsticks and small bowls of various sizes. The bowls hold food offerings for ceremonial occasions.

Worshippers kneel on a bamboo mat in front of a small table and pray. A small cast-iron stove, so fragile now it's ready to collapse under its own weight, sits in the southwest corner.

In recent years, temple use has dwindled. Chorley, who was married in the temple, said her father used to open it up for occasional Chinese visitors from San Francisco. It wasn't until after her Chinese grandmother died in 1952 that non-Chinese visitors were allowed inside the temple, said Chorley.

"My family for four generations has felt honor-bound to temple traditions. That's why it remains in its original state," she said.

Chorley, her sister, Loretta Hee McCoard of Mendocino, and two brothers, Wesley and Dewey Hee, agreed four years ago to deed over their interest in the valuable temple property to a newly formed nonprofit organization formed to secure private and government funds to preserve the temple for future generations.

In January, the effort got its first major boost when state officials announced an $84,000 grant to Mendocino County to cover preliminary efforts to stabilize the building and begin restoration. When completed, the temple will be opened for limited public viewing.

Although the Temple of Kwan Tai once served 500 to 700 Chinese residents who lived in the booming mill town of Mendocino in the 1870s, Chorley said she and her brothers and sister grew up in an era when theirs was the only Chinese family left in the then-blue-collar coastal town.

It was not easy. "The racial bias was very strong at the time. The fact that our mother was Caucasian didn't help matters," recalled Chorley.

minent is Look Tin Eli, president of the Canton Bank of San Francisco."

But the date of Tin Eli's death remains obscure. Among Daisy's papers we find a Mendocino Beacon obituary dated (in ink) Dec. 11, 1894. This is obviously an error, since Theresa's great-grandfather didn't launch his China Mail Steamship Company until 1915.

Was he really murdered by a rival tong? Here is what this newspaper reported in his obituary: "Tin Eli, former resident of Mendocino, where he was born and grew to manhood, is reported dead in Hong Kong. He sailed for China some months ago after a price had been set on his head by a rival tong." This must have appeared in the Beacon some time in 1918, if Bunner can be relied upon. At the time, Tin Eli was considered to be "probably the leading Chinese business man" of San Francisco.

Mendocino Middle School had 55 percent of their students who registered. Only 39 percent voted.

There were 64 votes for Dukakis and Bentsen; 80 percent of the middle school vote. Twelve students voted for Bush and Quayle; one vote for the Libertarian party candidate; one for Pat Paulsen; and one vote for the Independent party candidate.

"His death will be regretted by numerous local people who had followed his career since his birth," the Beacon reported. "He was aged about 45 years, and is survived by a wife and several children, also one brother."

Not only were our Chinese barred from whites' classrooms in our public schools, but their parents were ignored when it came to California's censuses — which listed Caucasians only, no Chinese or Indians. It is ironic that Tin Eli and his brother Lee, who also became a bank president and left an estate of "at least a couple of million dollars," according to Bunner, so far outshone most of the Caucasians with whom they lived and worked.

We failed to obtain Theresa Look's mailing address. If she turns up accurate information about her great-grandfather elsewhere, I hope she will let us in on it.

Recently while Evelyn Escola was on duty as a Kelley House docent three Chinese ladies from San Francisco — Theresa Look, Ann Yick and Eunice Jung — came in to ask about Theresa's great-grandfather, Mendocino-born Look Tin Eli.

Few (if any) Mendocino natives can boast of Tin Eli's success in the financial world. Information uncovered in our historical library for Theresa Look shows that her great-grandfather became president of a bank, founded and ran a steamship company valued at $7 million and left an estate of more than a million dollars, when he died in Hong Kong at the age of 45!

It is likely that Tin Eli was murdered by a rival tong.

Since Tin Eli was Theresa's great-grandfather, she is the great-great-granddaughter of Tin Eli's father, who was one of Mendocino's pioneer settlers.

This was Eli Tie Kee (or Key) who was at first Daniel Milliken's cook and later established a three-story frame general store and lodging house on the south side of Main Street. When he returned to his Chinese homeland he sold his business to Look Sing Yea. It was one of two structures burned to the ground in January, 1911.

Old Eli left two sons in Mendocino, Tin and Lee, both of whom were students in the Chinese classroom of the first grammar school — also the victim of a fire. According to the July 20, 1889 edition of this newspaper: A Chinese school has been established in one of the rooms of the old schoolhouse, and Miss Laura Nelson has accepted the position of teacher. This solves the vexed question of admitting Chinese children into our public school, over which there has been considerable trouble here.

Most of our information on Tin Eli and his father comes from the letters of W.C. Bunner, Tin Eli's business agent, to Daisy Kelley MacCallum. We quote first from a letter dated April 2, 1927, in one of Daisy's scrapbooks:

"Old Eli, the pioneer Chinese of Mendocino, had his little shop on Main Street of the town. He had two sons, Tin and Lee, both born in the rooms back of the old shop. My good mother taught those two Chinese boys their ABC's and later they became pupils in the public school. Both were blessed with brains, ambition and vision."

Tin Eli, according to Bunner, died in 1918.

"In 1915," wrote Bunner, "I assisted Tin in founding the Chinese Mail Steamship Company, started with a capital of $75,000 and one long ship, but before the close of 1918 owned floating property worth over seven million dollars. Tin made me sole agent of his steamship company in all Japan, in which capacity I spent the last five years of my active business career."

This newspaper reported on Oct. 16, 1915, that "the China Mail Steamship Company, with a paid-up capital of $10,000,000, has been formed in San Francisco to compete with the Japanese in trans-Pacific trade. Among the organizers, one of the most pro-

Mendocino High School and Middle School participated in a nation-wide mock election Thurs., Nov. 3 sponsored by Time-Life.

Only one-fourth of the nation's possible voters voted in the last election. Time-Life wanted to find out how that number would compare to high schoolers if they were given a chance to vote. They also wanted to help young people by turning them on to their power to vote early in life. Part of the simulation was to find out the political values of students.

On the back of the ballot was a survey dealing with the crucial issues facing the country today, such as drugs, the Iran Contra affair and nuclear conflicts. Along with the survey was a personal section that asked questions concerning future financial expectations compared to their parent's current status.

After the ballots were in Thursday, social science teacher Peggy Bell sent the results into the Secretary of State in Sacramento. They in turn sent the information to the national office New York City in the Time/Life Building. The same night the results were broadcast nationwide. Results were posted in the Mendocino High School library the next day.

Out of a possible 294 people in the high school, 195 registered to vote. That is just 66.3 percent of the school. Just over 85 percent of the registered voters actually voted on that Thursday. Sixty-five percent of the students registered as Democrats, 13.3 percent registered as Republicans, and 19.4 percent registered as Independents or "other."

In the freshmen class, 44 out of the possible 61 students, or 72 percent of the class, registered; two sisters and the groom's daughter. After months making the arrangements to perfection, the bridal couple stayed on for three days.

Lifetime resident, Raymond Hee, died Thursday, Dec. 17, at Mendocino Coast Hospital after a short illness. He had celebrated his 44th birthday on Dec. 9.

Raymond was well known in Mendocino, and in his earlier years, spent much of his time at the high school. Dee Lemos said; "Raymond knew all the kids in the school and what they were doing. He loved to watch the educational movies being shown in the classrooms. It was his social life, and he touched the lives of all of us at the school as well as in the town."

For 20 years he went to the Cypress Street Center in Fort Bragg and was valued for his friendliness and the enthusiasm with which he attended the workshop.

In Mendocino, Bill Zacha, founder of the Art Center, summed up the feelings of the shopkeepers; "We're going to miss Raymond in this block of Main Street. He was one of those special people who belonged to all of us. Every morning, as I walked to work, he'd greet Pistone and me. He referred to Pistone as the 'boss', and we had our daily banter about going to work. He was proud of the chairs made at the Cypress Street Center, and liked to show the ones off that are on display on the Bay Gallery's deck. Raymond's family, his co-workers, and friends around Mendocino will miss him."

Raymond Hee is survived by his mother, Martha Hee; brothers, Wesley, Mervin, Wayne and Dewey; and two sisters, Loretta McCoard and Loraine Chorley.

The family requests memorial contributions to be sent to the Cypress Street Center, 350 Cypress St., Ft. Bragg, CA 95437.

The Temple of Kwan Tai

By EVA WELLES and PRIYA DAVIS
with assistance from MHS teacher
BRONWYN RHOADES

Upon discovering the Temple of Kwan Tai, a much weathered and neglected historic landmark, we were faced with many mysteries. These mysteries include the unknown number of Chinese in Mendocino in the past as well as the present, why does only one family remain; why does so little evidence of Chinese culture remain?

The prejudice towards the Chinese in Mendocino and other coastal communities from the 1840s to the 1940s leads to varied information. One of the original Chinese families resides in our community today: The Hee Family still lives here and their ancestors founded the Temple of Kwan Tai. As researchers we must cross-reference our sources to try and find the most accurate information and construct a clear picture of history. We have looked at the Hee family histories and listened to their oral traditions. We also have begun examining the Mendocino Beacons from the 1800s to find as much information as possible on the local Chinese. There are a few additional resources, such as "My Life in Mendocino" and "The Chinese of the Mendocino Coast," and other accounts written of people's personal recollections, hearsay, and histories.

According to the Hee family oral accounts, the first Chinese in Mendocino came by way of junks, or Chinese sailing vessels. Seven or eight junks left China during the 1850s, with hope of striking it rich in the California gold rush. They crossed the Pacific Ocean, headed for Jinshan, or San Francisco. Only two of these boats survived, one of which landed at Caspar Beach. One person on the boat was a member of the Hee family, who worked at the Caspar Lumber Co. and helped to settle Mendocino.

The Frolic, a Chinese trading ship, was headed for San Francisco but through misguidance ended up near Mendocino. It crashed on the rocks off Point Cabrillo. As the ship filled with water little of the cargo was saved. Historian Thomas Layton says that the cargo included such things as silks, porter (a kind of beer), ivory, Chinaware, and fabrics. The few survivors eventually moved south towards Fort Ross and Bodega Bay. They met with Jerome B. Ford, delegator of the Bodega sawmill. In their journeys north to salvage Frolic remnants, Ford was impressed by the large redwoods and decided to start a sawmill in Big River. The Chinese played a large part in the start of Mendocino's logging industries.

The Temple of Kwan Tai is also referred to as the "Joss House." This is a common phrase for Chinese temples, possibly derived from the Spanish or Portuguese word for god "Dios." The temple may have been called the "god" house, transformed from the "Joss House." There are few remaining "Joss Houses" in California today. In 1979, through the efforts of Lorraine Hee-Chorley, the temple became a California Historical Landmark.

The Hee family tried to preserve the Temple of Kwan Tai by themselves, but eventually formed a non-profit corporation to facilitate the preservation. The primary fund-raising event for the Temple of Kwan Tai corporation is the Annual Chinese New Year's dinner: Feb. 21, 1998 celebrated the "year of the tiger" with a full capacity dinner held at Saint Anthony's Hall with traditional foods and decorations. The event was a great success.

As our Tuesday Community Involvement class we have initiated the historical research of the temple. We are helped by and assisting with the freshman Windows 1 class, "My Name, My Family, My Heritage." The second trimester Windows 1 class used their videography skills to begin documenting this historical project. They are reading the old copies of the Beacon and finding lots of useful information. This Beacon data is combined into a database by subjects to aid future researchers. We created this database for the freshmen to organize their research discoveries. The history of the Chinese in Mendocino project is a wonderful chance for students to get involved in the community.

Students are doing primary research with original sources. They are documenting through video technology the process as well as the product. Windows 1 students were traditionally assigned a project in which they connect themselves to their community. The mission of this year's collaborative project was to "create a short video, between five and ten minutes, about what you have seen, heard, and done to learn about the Chinese community and its history in Mendocino. The class worked with Lisa Fredrickson of New Pony Productions, as professional film editor who recently moved into our district. Ms. Fredrickson has produced videos for National Geographic and the Discovery Channel, and we are fortunate to have her assistance in documenting our community's history.

Our past few months of extensive research have lead to an increasing interest in this project. The preservation of the Temple of Kwan Tai is vital in preserving this community's heritage. This California historic landmark has fallen into severe disrepair.

Now that students at Mendocino High School and the North Coast Rural Challenge Network have become engaged in preserving this piece of history the project is moving forward more rapidly. It is hoped that students will realize that the history of the community is part of its identity and therefore part of their own identity as members of the community.

Over Alternative Education Week we traveled with Deena Zarlín to the San Francisco Bay Area to continue and extend our research. We left early Sunday morning in order to make an 11 a.m. ferry from Tiburon to Angel Island. There we met Wendy Roberts, a Mendocino resident who has been writing grants for the temple, and walked around the island with her and her husband. We toured the Immigration Center and saw the living quarters where the Chinese were held during the long processing periods. It was really sad to hear people's stories and to hear how immigrants were treated upon their arrival to California.

From there we went to the Maritime Museum and saw the Frolic exhibit designed by Philip Choy, president of the Chinese Historical Board. From there we went to the heart of Chinatown for an evening of fine dining and viewing of Chinese culture. We were very exhausted from all our activities that day so we went to stay in Berkeley for the night.

We woke up early Monday morning so that we could prepare for our presentation to the National Trust for Historic Preservation. We went to San Francisco a little early to look around Union Square before heading over to the Trust. Our presentation went really well. We met with Courtney DamKroger and the rest of the staff of the National Trust, Philip Choy, and Wendy Roberts. We showed the Windows 1 class video and talked about all of our work on the Temple project. Everyone seemed quite impressed and enthused with the project.

We spent our last day conducting research at UC Berkeley. We began at the Bancroft Library but our findings lead us to other libraries and research facilities within the campus. We looked at old store records and pictures of Mendocino. We examined old insurance maps, trying to find the location and changes of Chinese dwellings and establishments in the late 1800s. Not only did we have a great time, we found out lots of information and many sources to help us along the way. The trip was a definite success.

On Saturday, May 2, the Kelley House held its annual house tour of Mendocino. One stop on the tour was the Temple of Kwan Tai. We were there, alongside Loretta Hee, acting as docents at the temple. This gave us a chance to really be in the community and share our work on the project.

We recently got a new member to our Community Involvement research team. Solange Roberdeau, a sophomore at the high school, showed great interest in this project and has joined in our search to preserve the Temple. We will continue our research throughout the year, hoping to find as much information as possible and save our community's heritage. This collaborative project recognizes and appreciates the assistance of the Kelley House Museum, the Temple of Kwan Tai, NCRCN, Deena Zarlín and Wendy Roberts.

The Temple of Kwan Tia: A piece of Mendocino history and how it can be preserved

By KATHLEEN M. NEVIN

To fulfill a promise to their father to protect forever the Temple of Kwan Tia on Albion Street, members of Mendocino's Hee family have spent the past several years forming a nonprofit corporation to enable them to preserve the only original temple of its kind in Northern California.

"We realized about four years ago that structural damage to the building would cost about $40,000 to repair," explained Lorraine Hee-Chorley. "Becoming a nonprofit was the best way to achieve our promise to our father to save and protect the temple forever, but to have it not become a financial burden to any one person in the family.

"Many people wanted to help us with the restoration, but without being a nonprofit corporation, there was no way to funnel the money," Hee-Chorley continued. "However, the IRS says that if we are a nonprofit, we cannot retain private ownership of the property."

The property is the brilliant green and red temple on lower Albion Street, often incorrectly referred to as the "Joss House," an anglicized term, according to Hee-Chorley. Wrapped around the Temple of Kwan Tia, and included in the property, is the three-bedroom home in which Loraine and her

French class gets squeezed out in ongoing MUSD budget crunch

By DEBORAH JACKSON

The elimination of funding for the advanced level high school French class seemed like yet another of the tedious budget details which crowded the MUSD Board's agenda last Thursday night.

However, the discussion soon crystallized the acute frustration experienced daily by teaching staff, students and school administrators under the current economic restrictions.

Superintendent Ken Matheson reported that the program had been funded specifically for one semester

French program, and create an impossible load for the Spanish department. The cost to provide additional Spanish staff matches that required to add the needed French class.

"The State is recommending more languages be offered to students, in order to compete in today's world, not less," said Alvarez, who was joined on this note by several parents in the audience.

According to Jane Dymond, District Administrative Coordinator, these cuts were originally made two years ago when layoffs and budget cuts were acutely experienced in many programs

"It isn't as though the District funded this program and then pulled back," said Dymond, "many programs are experiencing the same deficiencies."

The Board acknowledged the need for the district to develop a foreign language policy to begin at the grammar school level.

The search for approximately $3,600 in "alternative funds" to offer French 3/4 for another semester will be taken up by the Budget Advisory Committee on Dec. 9, and all interested parents and students are encouraged to attend.

siblings were raised.

"My sister Loretta (Hee McCoard), my brothers Wesley and Dewey and I have deeded our interest in the property over to the nonprofit corporation, the Temple of Kwan Tia, Inc.," said Hee-Chorley.

The corporation is proceeding to purchase the two remaining shares from other family members and to begin a major fund-raising project.

"The fund-raising is to purchase the balance of the property and to raise funds for the physical restoration of the building and the conservation of the materials inside," explained Hee-Chorley. "Our goal is $200,000."

In addition to the repair of the structure's flooring and foundation, some of the plans for the temple include restoration and preservation of the artifacts inside.

"There are silk lanterns and altar pieces, the altar itself, silk flowers and a silk painting of Kwan Tia," said Hee-Chorley. "These all need to be put behind glass. Also the silk is deteriorating because of moisture, so we need to put in electricity and then a heating system."

"We also plan to make the building fire-proof and earthquake-proof and to replace some of the redwood wall studs," Hee-Chorley added.

The corporation is counting on support from the local community as well as the Chinese communities in the Bay Area and Los Angeles.

"This is the only original living, thriving structure intact in Northern California that says that the Chinese people were here," emphasized Hee-Chorley, who often lectures to grade school children about the temple and the Chinese in Northern California. "Nothing has been done to change the building. It's like stepping back in time. It still has a 'living feeling,' as the Native Americans would say." She added that there is a temple in Weaverville, but that it was rebuilt by the State of California when it burned several years ago.

"The Chinese were a major force here, and Mendocino would not be here if it weren't for the Chinese helping with the lumber industry and providing needed services like laundry and cooking," Hee-Chorley continued. Her father, George Hee, told his family that at one time there were as many as 500 Chinese people living in Mendocino.

The Temple of Kwan Tia was built in the late 1850s by a Chinese consortium, and enlarged in the 1860s to accommodate a full-time priest in a small room behind the altar. Original lumber costs were $14.

"The temple was built on that spot because it was up high, overlooking the Chinese settlement," explained Hee-Chorley, adding that the Chinese lived on the land that is across from what is now the Bank of America. "It could be seen from below and from across the Bay, too. It is also said to be in harmony with the wind and the water. The windows look out to the Pacific Ocean."

"Each temple is identified with its own god," Hee-Chorley continued. "Kwan Tia is known as a military god because he was a general, but to the Chinese people he is known for his loyalty."

In 1871, Chong Sun, George Hee's grandfather, purchased the temple property for $260 in gold. Each generation since then has promised to preserve the Temple of Kwan Tia.

"My grandmother, Yip Lee, promised her father Chong Sun, and then my father promised his mother, Yip Lee [the wife of Ah Hee], that, no matter what, he would maintain it," said Hee-Chorley. "My father never repainted the building. Red and green are significant colors to the Chinese people, and he made a point not to change it. Red means good luck or joy, and green means wealth or life. Any important Chinese building is painted red and green."

George Hee died in 1977, and since that time only minimum maintenance has been done to the property. The building became a California State Historical Landmark in 1978.

The Temple's Board of Directors, Loraine Hee-Chorley, Loretta Hee McCoard, Wesley and Dewey Hee, Marlene Iversen and Alice Wittig, are now putting together a fund-raising letter.

"We are looking for members that will help us meet the goal of our bylaws, preservation, conservation and education," said Hee-Chorley. "Once the structural work is done, we will open the temple to the public. We'd like to have the kick-off on Chinese New Year."

Future plans include compiling information on the history of the Chinese in the area and in Mendocino County, and doing public appearances to historical societies.

"We're really excited about this project and hope that people will be supportive in helping us preserve this important national landmark," added Loretta Hee McCoard.

Donations or membership applications can be sent to the Temple of Kwan Tia, P.O. Box 633, Mendocino. For further information, call Loretta Hee McCoard, 937-5123.

California summary

A series of very weak weather systems will bring some cloudy skies and a chance of precipitation to the extreme north through the week but little or no change for the remainder of the state, the National Weather Service said.

A rapidly weakening cold front lies near the coast of Oregon this morning and a band of high clouds has advanced into northern California.

No rainfall has been reported in California from this system.

Inside view of handicaps

SEBASTOPOL — A teacher at Oak Grove School has come up with a program for National Handicapped Awareness Week that will give students first-hand experience with the practical problems handicapped people face.

Nancy Jenkins, teacher of the Trainable Mentally Retarded class, is planning a series of tasks for students to try using blindfolds, wheelchairs, and crutches.

The idea is for students to learn to view the problems of the handicapped as inconveniences — quantitatively but not qualitatively different from needing glasses, according to principal Patty Bush.

The obstacle course will be set up on the playground May 15 from 9 to 12 a.m., and the community is invited to join the students.

Other events planned for the day include films of the Special Olympics at Sonoma State Hospital, films from United Cerebral Palsy, and from Citizens Advocacy to be presented in the classrooms throughout the day.

A medic will also be on the school grounds to give a demonstration of ambulance equipment, and parents of handicapped children will be available to speak.

Mendocino Joss House landmark

By JIM HARRIS
Correspondent

MENDOCINO — The village's Joss House, built around 1854, has been officially designated as a state historical landmark. The state Historical Resource Commission, meeting in Los Angeles last week, unanimously approved the application, made by Lorraine Hee, a 26-year-old Mendocino resident who is the great-granddaughter of one of the builders.

The Joss House is properly known as the Temple of Kuan Ti, Hee explained. It is a nondenominational Chinese house of worship dedicated to Kuan Ti, a Chinese national hero who fought to restore the Han Dynasty in the Second Century AD. It was nicknamed Joss House by the Portugese residents of Mendocino in the 19th Century because of the joss incense and candles burned there.

The house has been in continual private ownership by her family and will continue that way, Hee said. Her family still celebrates occasional worship and anniversary ceremonies in the temple. It is open to the public for tours by appointment only.

Hee said her great grandfather with a number of relatives sailed across the Pacific Ocean in a sampan (a small fishing vessel) in the 1850s. He was headed for Monterey Bay, the site of many other Chinese landings, but drifted off course and landed instead on Caspar Beach (just north of here). He and his family soon found work in the thriving area lumber mills.

In the latter part of the 1850s, the family moved to the burgeoning "Chinatown" of Mendocino. "Chinatown was located on the headlands, in a swampy area next to the Mendocino mill. It was below the rest of the town of Mendocino and in an area nobody else wanted to live in," Hee said.

She said that by the 1880s, there were "between 300 to 500" Chinese in the neighborhood, or about one-third of the town's population. She said the Chinese were tolerated, but never really made welcome by the white settlers of the town and after the mill went into decline and jobs became scarce, most of them moved down to San Francisco's Chinatown "where they were protected and felt at home."

Hee said her great grandfather, Chong Sung (also known as Joe Lee), built the temple along with three other men. "They wanted a place to continue their ancient traditions and to preserve their culture."

Generally services are performed to mark the anniversary of the death of an ancestor and also for dates such as Chinese New Year. The ceremony often consists of the lighting of candles and incense, prayers and the burning of ritual paper money as a sacrifice. Often food is involved.

"We may prepare a meal of rice, boiled chicken, nuts and fruits (such as mandarin oranges) and rice wine in our house," Hee said. "We bring the hot dinner to the temple. We pray and then leave the temple and lock the door for 15 minutes. We return, we spill the rice wine on the floor as an offering to Kuan Ti and leave the nuts and fruit for him. We take the rice and chicken back to the house and eat it."

Hee said she is researching the history of the Chinese on the Mendocino Coast and would also like to restore the temple, which needs painting and minor repairs. Now that the temple has obtained state landmark status, she hopes to obtain funding for both projects.

She said there are several other Joss Houses around the state. One in Weaverville, is state-owned.

"The state parks department restored it extensively and not entirely accurately. I feel they destroyed much of the solemnity of the place. That's one of the reasons I want to keep ours in the family," Hee said.

Persons wishing to tour the Mendocino Joss House may write Lorraine Hee at P.O. Box 434, Mendocino, 95460.
